The bargaining zone is the space between the buyer's and the seller's reservation price. The zones must overlap for a possible agreement. While BATNA is your source of power, you also have to assess your counterpart's goal, BATNA and reservation price. Concessions Often, concessions are made in the course of a negotiation.

The Art and Science of Negotiation

There are four stages to a negotiation process in general: 1) nontask sounding; 2) task-related exchange of information; 3) persuasion; and 4) concessions and agreement. The Japanese spend much time on stages one and two while Americans do not spend much time on these stages (Graham and Sano). Since so many people live in such a limited space in
