The answer to this one is a little complicated. Mothballs can indeed help to get groundhogs out of your yard, but it won't stop them from returning. When you find a burrow entrance on your property, you can pour some mothballs into the entrance. This will prevent the groundhog from using that entrance for several weeks while the smell dissipates.

As both are small, brown, burrowing rodents, the gopher and groundhog are easily confused for each other. In fact, because these pests live in overlapping regions of the U.S., it is possible that homeowners will struggle with identifying one or both. Despite their similarities, gophers and groundhogs belong to two different classes of rodents.
